

Escrow

[es·krō]

noun

An escrow is an arrangement in which a neutral third party, called a settlement agent, holds legal documents and funds on behalf of a buyer and seller. The settlement agent distributes funds and documents according to the buyer's and seller's instructions. By acting as a neutral third party on behalf of the buyer and seller, the settlement agent can save time and facilitate the real estate closing.

Our settlement agents are experienced and extensively trained in real estate procedures, taxes, deeds and title insurance.
